B

In the woods waits the only person with whom I can be myself—Gale. I can feel the muscles in my face relaxing, my pace quickening as I climb the hills to our place, a rock ledge overlooking a valley. The sight of him waiting there brings on a smile. Gale says I never smile except in the woods.

“Hey, Katniss,” says Gale.

“Look what I shot.” Gale holds up a loaf of bread with an arrow stuck in it, and I laugh. It's real bakery bread. Fine bread like this is for special occasions.

“What did it cost you?” I said.

“My sister Prim left us a cheese.” I pull it out.

His expression brightens at the treat. “Thank you, Prim. We’ll have a real feast.”

Suddenly he falls into a Capitol accent as he mimics(模仿) Effie Trinket, the dramatically positive woman who arrives once a year from the Capitol to announce the names to play the death game.

“I almost forgot! Happy Hunger Games!—”

“—be ever in your favor!” I finish the sentence in the same tone.

We have to joke about it because the alternative is to be scared to death. Besides, the Capitol accent is so affected, almost anything sounds funny in it.

I watch as Gale pulls out his knife and slices the bread. He could be my brother. Straight black hair, olive skin, we even have the same gray eyes. But we’re not related. Most of the families who work the mines resemble one another this way.

Gale spreads the bread slices with the soft goat cheese. The day is glorious. The food is wonderful. Everything would be perfect if this really was a holiday, if all the day off meant roaming the mountains with Gale, hunting for tonight’s supper. But instead we have to be standing in the square waiting for the names to be called out and then die in the Hunger Games before long.

“We could do it, you know,” Gale says quietly.

“What?” I ask.

“Leave the district. Run off. Live in the woods. You and I, we could make it,” says Gale.

I don’t know how to respond. The idea is so preposterous.

“If we didn’t have so many kids,” he adds quickly.

They’re not our kids, of course. They are our sisters and brothers. And you may as well count in our mothers, too, because how would they live without us? Who would fill those mouths that are always asking for more?

24. What can be inferred about the relationship between Katniss and Gale?

- A. They are relatives who share a strong bond.
- B. They are cousins who work together in the mines.
- C. They are friends who share a common destiny.
- D. They are a couple who manage to escape together.

25. Based on the context, what does the word “preposterous” mean in the article?

- A. Ridiculous and unreasonable.
- B. Exciting and thrilling.
- C. Appealing and irresistible.
- D. Discouraging and depressing.

26. Which of the following is true according to the text?

- A. They live in the forest and survive by hunting.
- B. They sometimes trade prey for necessities.
- C. They work in the mines with almost no rest.
- D. They own a bakery and often make bread for special occasions.

27. What is the article mainly about?

- A. The importance of sacrifice for family and community.
- B. The joy of hunting prey and gathering food in the woods.

- C. The anticipation of joining in the Hunger Games.
- D. The struggle of living under the control of the Capitol.

C

Residents of India's capital New Delhi choked in a poisonous smog Wednesday as worsening air pollution surged past 50 times the World Health Organization's recommended daily maximum.

Many in the city cannot afford air filters(净化器)nor do they have homes where they can effectively seal from the misery of foul smelling air.

Cooler temperatures and slow-moving winds trap deadly pollutants each winter, stretching from mid-October until at least January. At dawn on Wednesday, hazardous pollutant levels in parts of the urban area of more than 30 million people topped 806 micrograms per cubic meter, according to monitoring firm IQAir.

That is more than 53 times the World Health Organization recommended daily maximum of dangerous cancer-causing microparticles known as PM2.5 pollutants that enter the bloodstream through the lungs. By midday, when air usually is at its best, it eased to about 25-35 times above danger levels, depending on different districts.

The city is blanketed in acrid smog each year, primarily blamed on stubble(秸秆) burning by farmers in neighboring regions to clear their fields for ploughing, as well as factories and traffic emissions. But a report by The New York Times this month, based on air and soil samples it collected over five years, revealed the dangerous smoke and gases released from power plants burning the city's landfill garbage mountains also gave rise to the smog.

The India Meteorological Department said that at least 18 regional airports had a visibility lower than 1,000 meters — even dropping below 500 meters in Delhi.

India's Supreme Court last month ruled that clean air was a fundamental human right, ordering both the central government and state-level authorities to take action. But critics say arguments between rival politicians heading neighboring states — as well as between central and local authorities — have compounded the problem.

Politicians from the central government are accused of not wanting to anger key figures in their constituencies(选区), particularly powerful farming groups. City authorities have launched several initiatives to tackle pollution, which have achieved far less than expected in practice.

28. Which of the following contributes to the severe smog in New Delhi?

- A. New Delhi Residents' limited access to air filters.
- B. Low temperature and unfavorable air conditions.
- C. Intentional burning of stubble by both farmers and factories.
- D. Poisonous smoke and gases released from landfill garbage mountains.

29. What does the underlined phrase in Paragraph 2 probably mean?

- A. Give rise to.
- B. Bring an end to.
- C. Shelter from.
- D. Fight against.

30. What can be inferred from the passage?

- A. The central government and local authorities seek to cooperate and address the issue.
- B. Statistics show the air quality of the India capital is at its best in the morning.
- C. New Delhi has the poorest visibility across the country on that particular day.
- D. Politicians from central government are reluctant to upset influential individuals.

31. What is a suitable title of the passage?

- A. India's capital chokes on toxic smog

- B. India struggles to breathe free
- C. Severe smog poisons India
- D. Who is to blame for the smog in New Delhi?

D

When Noah Lyles, an American sprinter, won gold in the Olympics 100-metre race in August, he held his hands out in front of him, wrists together and fingers extended, as though getting ready to catch a large ball. The gesture may have seemed odd, but fans of Japanese animation knew immediately that Mr. Lyles, a die-hard fan of the genre, was making a reference to a popular animation series, “Dragon Ball”.

Once a domestically consumed product “watched by people with no friends at school”, as one veteran producer recalls, anime has become a global sensation. There is an aesthetic meaning: anime is hand-drawn and usually two-dimensional, unlike the photorealistic 3D animation that has grown more common outside Japan. The characters often resemble hyper-caffeinated Tintins, with unusually large, expressive eyes, small noses, strange hair and easy-to-read emotions.

Recently anime has raced into people’s homes with Lyles-like speed. In 2023 Japan’s anime industry hit a record high, with revenues of ¥339 billion ($2.3b billion). Two factors help explain anime’s surging global popularity. The first is streaming, which made anime easier to find and watch. Fans no longer have to depend on the decisions of network programmers or wait a week for another episode. They can explore and discover on their own. Anime viewership boomed during the pandemic, as the world sat at home in front of screens for months. Second, audiences have grown tired and suspicious of Hollywood’s neat resolutions. As Susan Napier, a professor at Tufts University and expert on anime, explains, “Technology hasn’t brought us the utopia we thought it would, and the post-cold-war world has become more dangerous than we imagined,” which makes happily-ever-after endings implausible. Anime is willing to have heroes killed off and characters suffer huge loss. At the same time, protagonists(主角) are often cute and relatable. “It’s a dark world out there,” Ms. Napier says, so audiences “want that fluffy cuteness”.

Japan’s government noticed and eventually took action: in 2013 it launched an initiative called “Cool Japan”, in which it invested some ¥90 billion to propel Japan’s creative industries abroad. It was a flop, because of poorly chosen investments, but that has not stopped the government from trying again: it wants to quadruple the value of Japan’s content industry by 2033.

“People are aware of a world that’s unstable and more dangerous and have less ability to believe in the happily ever after,” Ms. Napier of Tufts suggests. Bad news for the world, but good for Japanese animators.

32. Why did Noah Lyles make the gesture in the first paragraph?

- A. To show his surprise at winning the race.
- B. To demonstrate his readiness to catch a ball.
- C. To pay admiration to his favorite animation series.
- D. To signal his confidence in winning the future races.

33. What can be inferred from the passage?

- A. Japanese anime achieves greater success at home than abroad.
- B. Japanese anime features characters with expressive and realistic design.
- C. Japanese anime conveys an aesthetic meaning with 3D technology.
- D. Japanese anime has undergone an expansion of audience.

34. Which of the following statements accounts for anime’s increasing global popularity?

- A. The pandemic makes audiences sit at home, exploring and discovering the episodes on their own.
- B. Streaming enables fans to be independent of network schedules and saves waiting time.

C. Unlike Hollywood's neat resolutions, anime creates unsatisfying endings to the heroes.

D. Technology fails to make the world safer, making happily-ever-after endings implausible.

35. What's Japanese government's attitude towards its anime industry?

A. Supportive.

B. Pessimistic.

C. Cautious.

D. Worried.

第二节（共 5 小题；每小题 2.5 分，满分 12.5 分）

根据短文内容，从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项，选项中有两项为多余选项。请将答案写在答题卷上。

Your colleague is the first one in and the last one to leave. They volunteer to take on every additional task that comes your team's way and they respond to emails within minutes. They're working all the time, whether from the office or from home. 36

Dealing with such a workmate can be challenging, but there are steps you can take to ease the negative effects of their behavior on yourself and your team.

Depersonalize their actions.

37, this is a classic example of a cognitive bias. In social psychology, this refers to the tendency humans have to owe another person's actions to their character or personality, while crediting our own behavior to external or situational factors that are outside our control. In other words, your colleague is probably not overworking to frighten or exceed you. Debias your thinking by considering other reasons for their behavior.

38

Guilt can make it easy for you to fall into the same patterns as your colleague. You may start comparing your capacity and output to theirs and wonder, "Am I really working hard enough?" Before you begin overextending yourself in an effort to "catch up", mind your mindset and be aware of extremist thinking. Taking time off for self-care isn't indulgent(纵容的), rather it's a precondition for your performance.

Set boundaries.

Workaholics tend to have few boundaries. You'll need to play defense by managing their expectations around your response times and availability. Let's say your colleague asks you to turn around a project brief in less than 24 hours. You can push back and explain, "That's not possible. If you have this sort of task in the future, I'll need at least a three days' notice to work it into my schedule." 39

Finally, remember to adjust your perspective on productivity. Despite the fact that you're tempted to evaluate your daily success based on the number of hours you work, it's the quality of work you deliver that matters most. 40

A. Resist peer pressure.

B. Accept your incapacity.

C. In short, you're dealing with a workaholic, or a work enthusiast.

D. Being good at your job doesn't mean working more but producing results.

E. If you blame yourself for failing to outperform your workaholic colleagues

F. While it's tempting to assume your colleague is overworking to outshine you

G. You might also advocate for better systems and processes that replace excess effort.

It was the first night of Chanukah(光明节) and the night before Ellie's last final. As a freshman she was more than ready to go home for the first time since August. She'd packed everything 41 the books she was cramming with and her menorah(烛台) that's lit every night of Chanukah. Ellie had been so 42 to pack the menorah earlier that night.

However, just as she was to 43 it was OK to "skip" the first night's lighting, the 44 from that special place where "mother guilt" resides said, "You lit the menorah!" Therefore, Ellie lit the candles, said the blessings and placed the menorah 45.

46 returning to the dorm after holidays, she found a small "Thank you" note taped to her door, signed "Susan" and dated the first day of Chanukah. Not knowing a Susan, Ellie 47 the note had been delivered to her by mistake.

Suddenly, there was a knock. There, standing in the hall was a woman Ellie didn't recognize. "I'm Susan," she said. "I wanted to thank you 48 but you'd already left before I finished my finals."

Sensing Ellie's (her) confusion, Susan 49 to come in and explain. It seemed that Susan had been facing the same 50 that night. Because her sister Hannah had been killed by a drunk driver ten months earlier, and the sisters had always taken turns lighting 51 candle and this wasn't Susan's year. It was too 52 to even think about Chanukah without Hannah and Susan had decided on skipping the entire holiday.

Susan was about to close her drapes(窗帘) when she happened to see the candles 53 in Ellie's window. "It was if Hannah had taken her turn and put the menorah in your window for me to see." Susan said she 54 the lights and watched the candles with blurred eyes until they burned out.

Believing Hannah's lights would never go out but be there in her heart when she needed reconnection with Hannah, all Susan had to do was 55 her eyes and "see" the candles in the window, the ones that Hannah had lit the last time it was her turn.

第二节 (满分 25 分)

阅读下面材料, 根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段, 使之构成一篇完整的短文。

The stage lights in the music hall darkened, as the next school's concert band settled onstage. The First Chair, a young violinist, called upon each section to play, tuning them with precision and grace. The moment the musical director appeared, a wave of applause filled the air. The annual High School Music Festival was the highlight of my year. As a music teacher, I never missed a session, always amazed by the extraordinary talents the musical directors inspired in their students. But this year might be my last visit. With age catching up, my desire for retirement was growing stronger.

Honestly, there was always a touch of dissatisfaction and envy in my heart as I watched these school bands, because I had never been able to develop a band to this level. I taught in a small primary school. My students played beginner music, and they were happy when we managed to play from the start all the way to the end of a piece, with all the instruments finishing together. The complexities of full tone, dynamic control, and balance were beyond their abilities.

As the band opened with their first piece, the striking sound of violins, accompanied by the lively notes of pianos, set my heart pounding. Wouldn't it be great to be the musical director for one of these massive high school bands? I thought as the music transported me. When the last notes rang out, there was a brief silence before thunderous applause erupted. My aging eyes scanned the stage, seeking familiar faces among the performers. But my vision was no longer sharp enough to recognize anyone.

During the tea break, I headed toward the entrance hall. "Miss Jones!" a young man's voice cut through the crowd. I recognized the concert uniform he was wearing. It was the very violinist I had been admiring, Puzzled, I searched his face for familiar features, It turned out to be Bradley, a former student of mine who was difficult to forget, Schoolwork had been hard for him, and he had struggled through all his subjects. It was a pleasant surprise to meet him here. We sat down and had a chat.

注意：

1. 续写词数应为 150 个左右；
2. 请按如下格式在答题纸的相应位置作答。

I remembered the day when he asked to join the school band. _____

I was still smiling as I made my way back to the music hall. _____
