第一节（满分 15 分）

One possible version:

Dear Jack,

How are you? I'm writing to discuss the preparation for the Poetry Contest next month.

I recommend Li Bai's Thoughts on a Quiet Night for our performance. There are two reasons. Firstly, it's short and easy to memorize, which suits you as a beginner. Secondly, its simple yet profound language vividly conveys deep homesickness, making it a timeless classic.

As for practice time, how about every Monday and Friday afternoon after school in our classroom? Is that OK for you? I believe we can do well with enough practice. Looking forward to your reply.

Yours,

Li Hua

第二节（满分 25 分）

One possible version:

"I have to do something," Bella thought to herself. She noticed Finn's endless crying and the dark circles under Mrs. Rodan's tired eyes. A bandaged ankle explained why they had been missing from the sidewalk for days. Without hesitation, Bella rushed home to get a bowl of warm soup and handed it to Mrs. Rodan. She then sat right down on the floor next to Finn, making funny faces and playing with him. Watching this, Mrs. Rodan finally let out a deep breath, eyes filled with tears — this time, from relief.

Soon, word about Mrs. Rodan spread quickly through the neighborhood. Neighbors began stopping by one after another, each offering whatever they could. Some brought home-cooked meals. Others offered to help with chores or simply stayed to keep her company. Mrs. Rodan, who had been struggling alone for days, finally felt the weight on her shoulders lift. With so many caring hands, her ankle healed steadily, and Finn's smiles returned. Looking back, Mrs. Rodan often said she had never felt so grateful to have Bella and everyone around.
